

Clemson University
Biomaterials Day - July 23, 2009

The Biomaterials Day at Clemson University was held at the Madren Conference Center in Clemson, South Carolina. This one day joint event, sponsored by the Society For Biomaterials, featured student research presentations, a keynote lecture, guest lectures, and a panel discussion on professional career development for students. Five students were selected for awards (best presentation grad, best presentation undergrad, etc.) and received certificates and monetary awards which were made possible by corporate donors. The Clemson student chapter of SFB provided help at registration tables, poster set up, moderating sessions, preparation of proceedings and conference bags, and other tasks. The student officers also reached out to students from other universities to initiate future social/scientific events and to offer assistance in development of new student chapters.
